Analyst Comments:

The project's cost per unit exceeds the CDLAC threshold, due in part to the City of Los Angeles adopting a new Project Labor Agreement (PLA) after the project had secured funding commitments. This unanticipated event resulted in labor-related cost increases of up to 15%. Other reasons for the high cost include general ongoing cost increases affecting construction-related materials and services, the additional cost associated with having to use a type III construction design due to the 6-story building design, and costs incurred for demolition and environmental remediation at the building site.

The developer explained that this supplemental allocation is needed to accommodate the cost increases described above and to maintain compliance with the requirement to finance at least 50% of the project's aggregate basis with volume cap tax-exempt bonds.
